

DELTA NATIONAL HERITAGE AREA FEASIBILITY STUDY

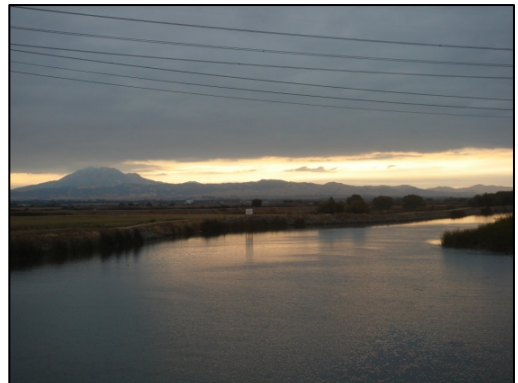

As mandated by Senate Bill X7-1, the Delta Protection Commission (DPC) is currently conducting a feasibility study for a National Heritage Area (NHA) in the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta. NHA designation could have potential economic benefits for the region, could help with public education and awareness about the Delta, and could help recognize and enhance the region's cultural and historic resources.

The feasibility study is scheduled to be completed by the end of 2011. Participation in the process by local stakeholders is highly encouraged. Three public meetings will be scheduled in locations throughout the Delta to discuss different topics:

- Mid-July 2011 – Potential themes, mission, vision, goals, and management alternatives
- Late August 2011 – Potential boundary delineations and management structure
- Late October 2011 – Draft feasibility study

Upon request, DPC staff is also available at anytime to make presentations on the topic to interested organizations.

If interested in a presentation, would like to be put on the project email list, or have any general questions, please contact the DPC office at (916) 776-2290 or email Alex Westhoff of the DPC at alex.westhoff@delta.ca.gov

For more information, please visit the DPC's website at: www.delta.ca.gov/heritage.htm